that Chinese woman's throat. I do not believe she has tried the bastinado act since on that three years' old child! Another instance was too in the morning, back inland when for more than half hour I heard a woman, or a fiend in woman's form, drive a little child from house to yard and from yard back to house beating and yelling at intervals. I tried to get the police in vain and then tried to attract her attention by throwing a brick at her but she was too far off. However, I have begun now to practise the art of throwing stones, baseballing is not to my gun, and she had better keep an eye or two in my direction on occasion. I'm not too amiable sometimes.

Being uncommonly fond of a good dog I am always saluting them and noticing any fine point or otherwise; it's nearly always "otherwise" here I am sorry to record. It seems if a man pay $1.10 annually he thinks that entitles him to keep if he choose a wretched mangy half-starved brute of a dog that he feeds neither from his hand nor from his manger (and which it would be a mercy to chloroform), but lets him range and skirmish and scamper and bark and yelp with others of his kind all times of night.

It is my intention one day, soon to look all the mules on the road in the face and try to discover what they are thinking of their drivers or owners. Sir John Lubbock tells how the treatment of a horse can be detected—and the eye have some say. Is it not the eyes in a human being that tells the story? In riding in the tram car the mules received no overdose of mercy, and the poor drivers not very jolly. I could not decide which to pity more; but I do hope the driver gets good pay. Not so many of us could make a success, I am quite sure, in driving two mules!

ED. THE INDEPENDENT:—

In Great Britain the following beverages were consumed in 1894:—1,358,599,150 gallons of beer; 16,960,035 gallons of foreign wine; 17,752,560 gallons of domestic wine and cider; 35,536,821 gallons of domestic spirituous liquors, and 9,084,978 gallons of colonial and spirituous liquors. Fanatics would make us believe that a nation becomes deteriorated through using intoxicating drinks. Can the W. C. T. U.—those persistent writers in the Advertiser—point to a more Christian, law-abiding, progressive and hardy a race than the British? In spite of their heavy drinking, the English University crew upheld the honor of those hard drinkers, by beating the Cornell University out of sight, in the late race on the Thames. Figures tell—it is hard to go against facts. Come, ladies, a little whisky now and then in that iced cold water, warms the stomach, thereby causing an easy flow of cheerfulness, and at the same time, imitating our Saviour, who considered it no sin to turn water into wine. AMERICAN.

The American League.

There was a large attendance at the American League meeting last evening. Installation of officers took place and a new ritual for that important ceremony was used for the first time, and was highly appreciated by the members. An amendment to the constitution was proposed which virtually will make the League a beneficiary organization. This new departure will be of great advantage to the members of the League who in time of sickness and distress will be assisted. The financial status of the League is excellent and the membership steadily increasing.
